In offering this issue of Humanities and Social Sciences Journal, Volume 16, Numbers 1-2, a peer-reviewed journal indexed in NepJOL and Asian Science Citation Index (ASCI-Database), we restate our assurance to encouraging, rigorous, inclusive, and innovative scholarship across the diverse fields that constitute the Humanities and Social Sciences. This journal is a platform for intellectual and academic engagement for scholars working in the respective fields of humanities and social sciences. Our mission to offer this bilingual and interdisciplinary journal is not merely to publish articles, but also to reflect our ambition for fostering and expanding the horizons of intellectual space where ideas can flow freely and contribute profoundly to global discussions.

A cluster of articles of various subjects of humanities and social sciences assembled in this volume bridge the disciplinary boundaries and explore current local and global issues of socio-economic, cultural, political, geographic, demographic, environmental, media and humanistic experiences. We rejoice the untiring power of enquiry that lies at the heart of Humanities and Social Sciences. Our academic effort builds learning environment and celebrates diverse viewpoints by enhancing and empowering the learners.

By welcoming submission in multi-language and interdisciplinary subjects, this journal accepts scholarly research articles on diverse aspects of humanities and social sciences prevalent in Nepal and abroad. As the Editor-in-Chief of this journal and Coordinator of Research and Educational Development Project Management Committee (RMC), I heartily appreciate to the Campus Chief, co-working editors and publisher for their unwavering commitment of the publication of this issue. I also extend my gratitude to the authors, peer reviewers and readers who sustain this community of knowledge and scholarship. It is their curiosity, enthusiasm, and critical engagement that make this journal possible.
