

Editorial

We are delighted to present the third volume of the Journal of Bhuwanishankar (JoBS), a multidisciplinary platform for scholarly engagement. This edition includes Ten research-based articles that delve into diverse fields, including English language and literature, Nepali language and literature, and sociology. As the journal continues to grow, it remains committed to fostering an environment where researchers, academics, and practitioners can share their innovative ideas and insights. The diversity of disciplines represented in this volume reflects our dedication to promoting academic inquiry and intellectual diversity.

The volume incorporates various articles that range from literary analysis to language education and sociocultural phenomena. These articles are mainly in two languages, i.e. English and Nepali. Articles in English discuss power structure, class consciousness, and gender biases. Moreover, they also discuss how marginalized voices are silenced by those who are in positions of power. One of the articles explores the cultural significance of Kalpabas, a practice popular in Hinduism. Likewise, articles in the Nepali language cover topics ranging from the intricacies of language learning and literary analysis to the exploration of sociolinguistic phenomena.

Publication of any research journal is a herculean job. It demands tremendous efforts and rigorous dedication from the researchers and the entire publication team. So, we extend our heartfelt gratitude to all the contributors, reviewers, and board members for their unwavering effort to bring out this volume in this shape. The editorial team warmly welcomes constructive feedback and suggestions from all the voracious readers, scholars, and academicians to further elevate the quality of future issues.

Happy reading!
