

EDITORIAL

Since its start in 2015, the Rupandehi Campus Journal has served as a light for scholarly conversation. What began as an annual publication has grown into a vibrant biannual schedule, demonstrating the journal's dedication to academic excellence and the wider sharing of knowledge.

The journal covers a wide range of multidisciplinary topics, including language, literature, mathematics, teaching and learning activities, health, management, law, Buddhism, and social sciences. Going beyond typical academic limits, it investigates ethical and social challenges in health and allied subjects, demonstrating a comprehensive approach to study.

Volume 4 of the journal represents the relentless search of knowledge and the exchange of ideas. This edition is dedicated to discovering and sharing research findings on Emerging concerns within the specified domains make substantial contributions to academia's intellectual landscape.

The Campus Research Cell serves as the driving force behind this academic endeavor. This critical entity directs the journal's operations, with the primary purpose of increasing the visibility and accessibility of open-access multidisciplinary papers. The research cell seeks to not only publish research, but also to increase its practical application and influence.

The journal's ideology revolves around reader access. The journal not only promotes, but also empowers users to freely read, download, copy, distribute, and print any published article without paying any fees. This commitment to open access extends throughout the entire process, from paper submission to processing and publication.

In essence, the Rupandehi Campus Journal serves as a vibrant hub where several academic disciplines intersect, encouraging intellectual growth and collaboration. The transition to a biannual publication schedule represents a forward-thinking strategy for keeping the journal at the fore front of intellectual interaction and knowledge sharing.
